THE AMERICAN EDUCATION CORPORATION OFFERS THREE NEW HIGH SCHOOL ELECTIVE COURSES

Oklahoma City, October 9, 2007: The American Education Corporation (AEC) – publisher of the A+nyWhere Learning System® (A+LS™) curriculum courseware program – announced today that it has recently released three new high school elective courses for Psychology, Career Essentials, and Personal Finance. All three electives meet the requirements of a one-semester high school course and are incorporated into the existing A+LS management system.

The addition of the new elective courses is part of an ongoing response to an overwhelming customer demand for new elective courses outside the A+LS courseware's popular core subjects of Language Arts, Mathematics, Science, and Social Studies.

AEC's 2006 release of elective courses in Anthropology, Art Appreciation, Health, Humanities I & II, Lifetime Fitness, and Sociology were received very positively by the AEC customer base and sales of the electives have surpassed all company forecasts.

The A+LS Electives focus the student on gaining a broad perspective of the subject through personal exploration. As a result, there is a significant emphasis on essays, projects, journals, and constructed responses. By requiring students to research materials through a variety of resources, these courses contribute to student growth in self-reliance.
