Oklahoma City, April 7, 2009: The American Education Corporation (AEC) – publisher of the A+nyWhere Learning System[®] (A+LS[™]), A+ LearningLink[™], and A+ Classroom Student Response Software[™] – announced today that it has released Algebra I: A Function Approach Part 1, a brand new high school course for the A+nyWhere Learning System courseware program.

Algebra I: A Function Approach Part 1 is the first full-semester course component of a comprehensive and complete yearlong course of study that is appropriate for grades 9–10. This new course is designed to provide students with varied approaches to solving algebra problems using real-world examples and scenarios. Students integrate the mechanics of algebra with real-life applications and gain an awareness of the many ways algebra is used in everyday situations. Algebra I: A Function Approach Part 2, the second component of the yearlong course, will be released in the early fall later this year.

The content in this course addresses all of the essential Algebra objectives recommended by the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics (NCTM).

Each of the thirty-seven lessons contains a study guide, practice exercises, and a mastery test. Many of the enriched interactive features include simulations, National Library of Virtual Manipulatives (NLVM) applets, and drag and drop activities that allow the student to respond to the material in a variety of ways.

Many lessons include graphing calculator activities designed to expand the students' understanding of functional relationships and data representation. A fully functional virtual graphing calculator designed specifically for this course is included.
